

VOGUE

LIVING > TRAVEL

7 Unusual Ways to See Paris

NOVEMBER 18, 2016 2:49 PM
by KAREN BURSHTEIN

Photographed by Helmut Newton, Vogue, October 1974

You've climbed the Eiffel Tower, ogled the Italian masters at the Louvre, sipped a verre de vin at a cafe on the Canal Saint-Martin. You've eaten at Le Fooding's top hot spots, and Google-mapped your way to the A.P.C. overstock store. But have you cinched a satin Cadolle corset around your waist? Gone jogging in Paris with a Sorbonne-educated guide? Or gotten to know the most colorful characters in Paris's most colorful food market? If not, maybe it's time to sign up for a specialized tour of the city. With so much on offer, you need an expert to ferret out the best. Next time you're in Paris, check out one of these in-depth and unusual tours.

Flea Market Tour

New York interior designer Sasha Bikoff takes people along on her buying trips to Paris's famous Marché aux Puces (a place she's frequented since she was an art history student there). She leads visitors away from the tat and towards the treasures including her favorite, Alain Kojfer, for all things Maison Jansen, and Fatmir Taraj, her go-to for Italian pieces from the 1960s and 1970s.